Please notice Ice (thicker with snow on it) in the background – Thin clear ice in the foreground – unfrozen water around the docks because of the bubblers.

frozen water

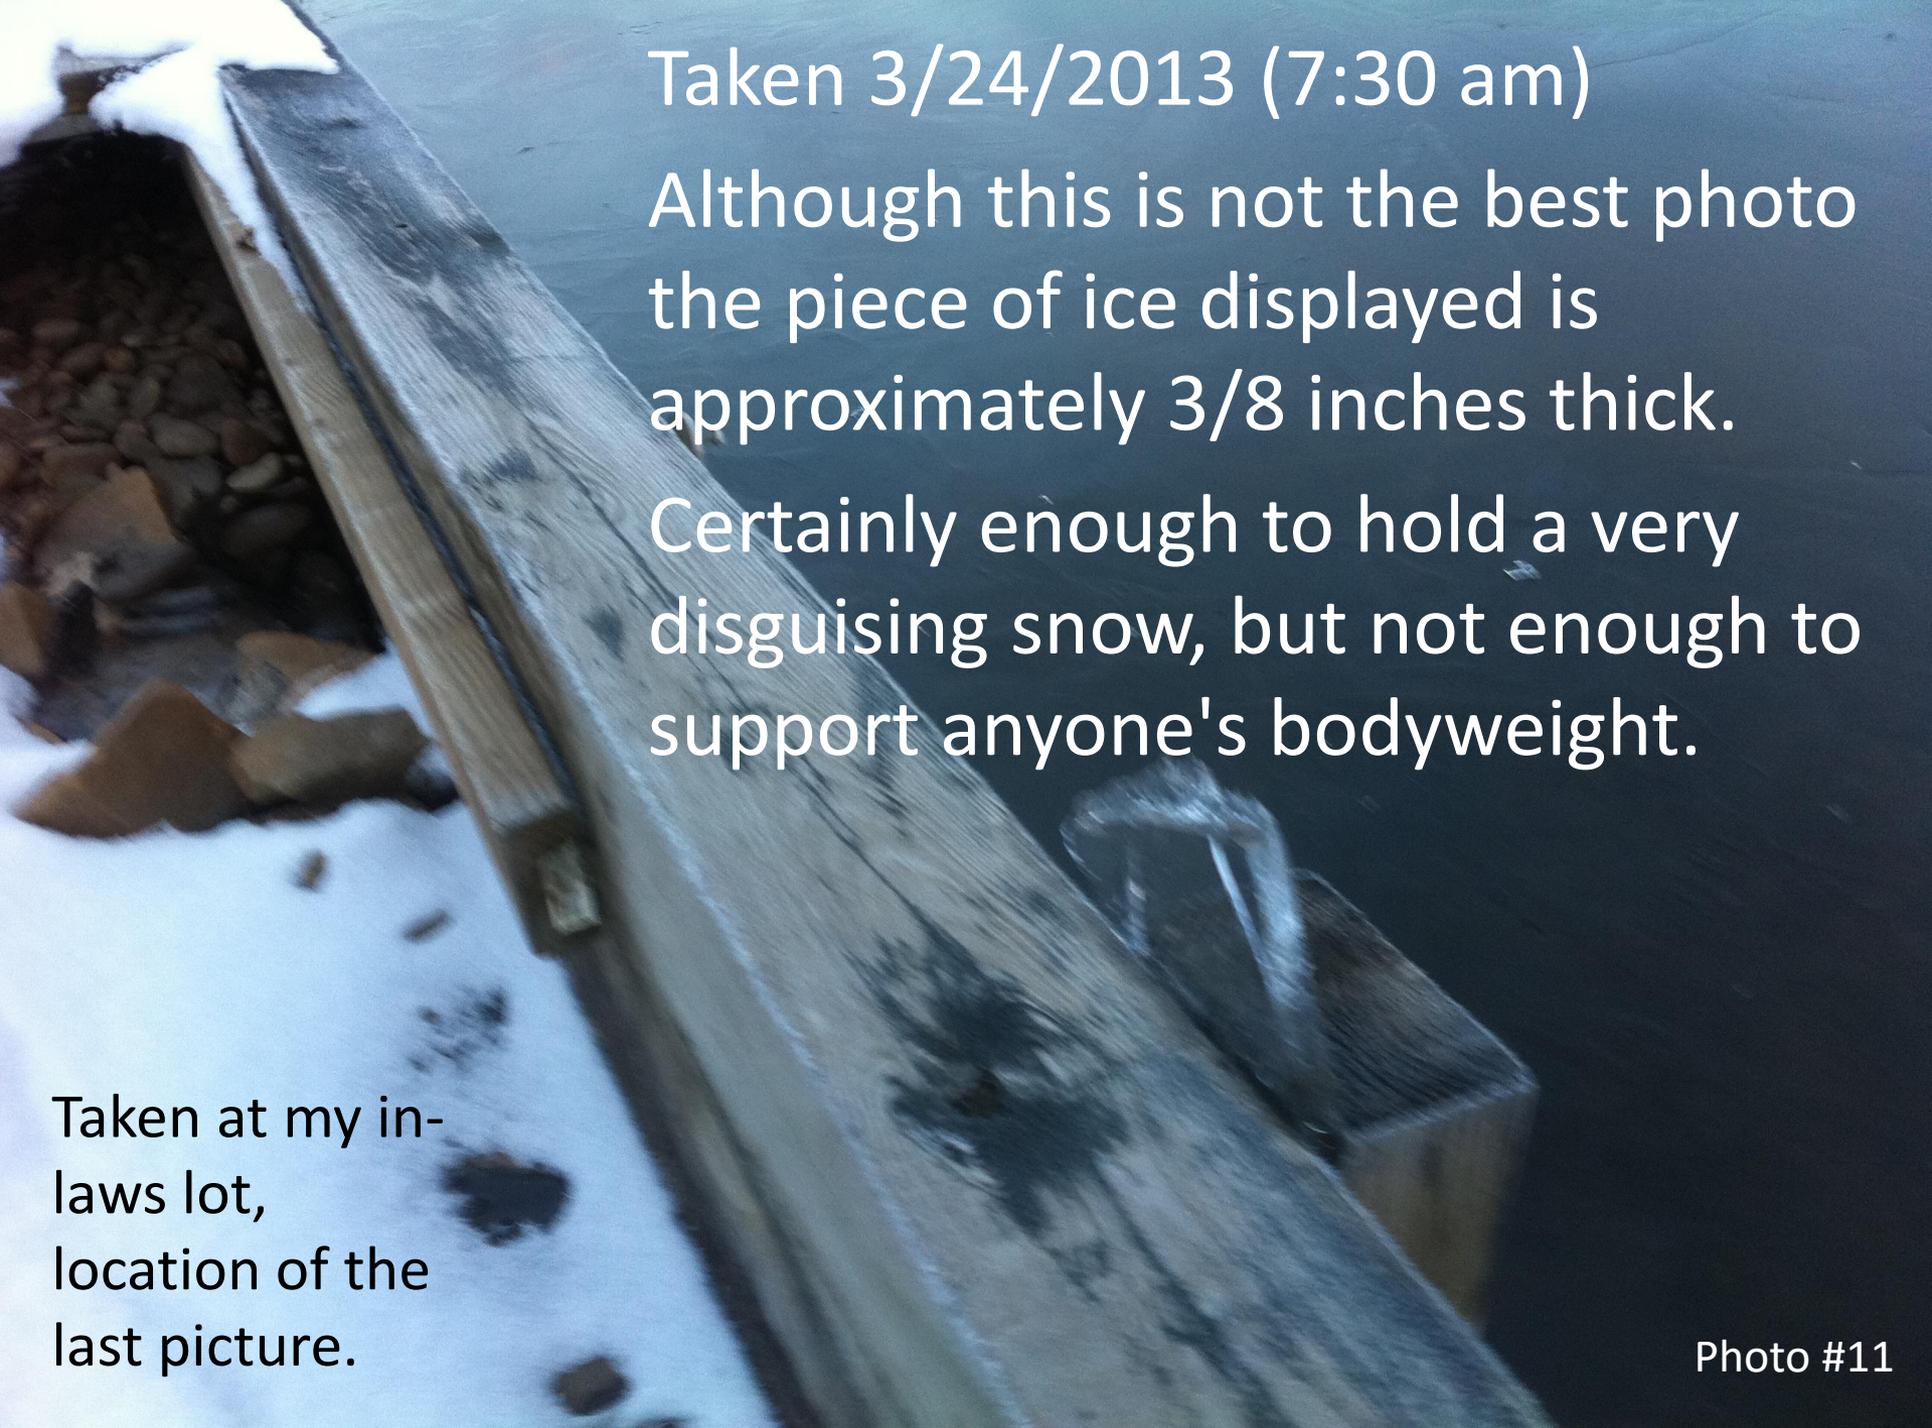

Photo #9

Taken 3/23/2013

This is taken from my in-laws lot (6 lots toward Clear Run from our lot).

It is very visible that the thin ice continues toward Clear Run another 3 to 4 lots from my in – laws lot. That is approximately 10 or 11 lots from our lot.

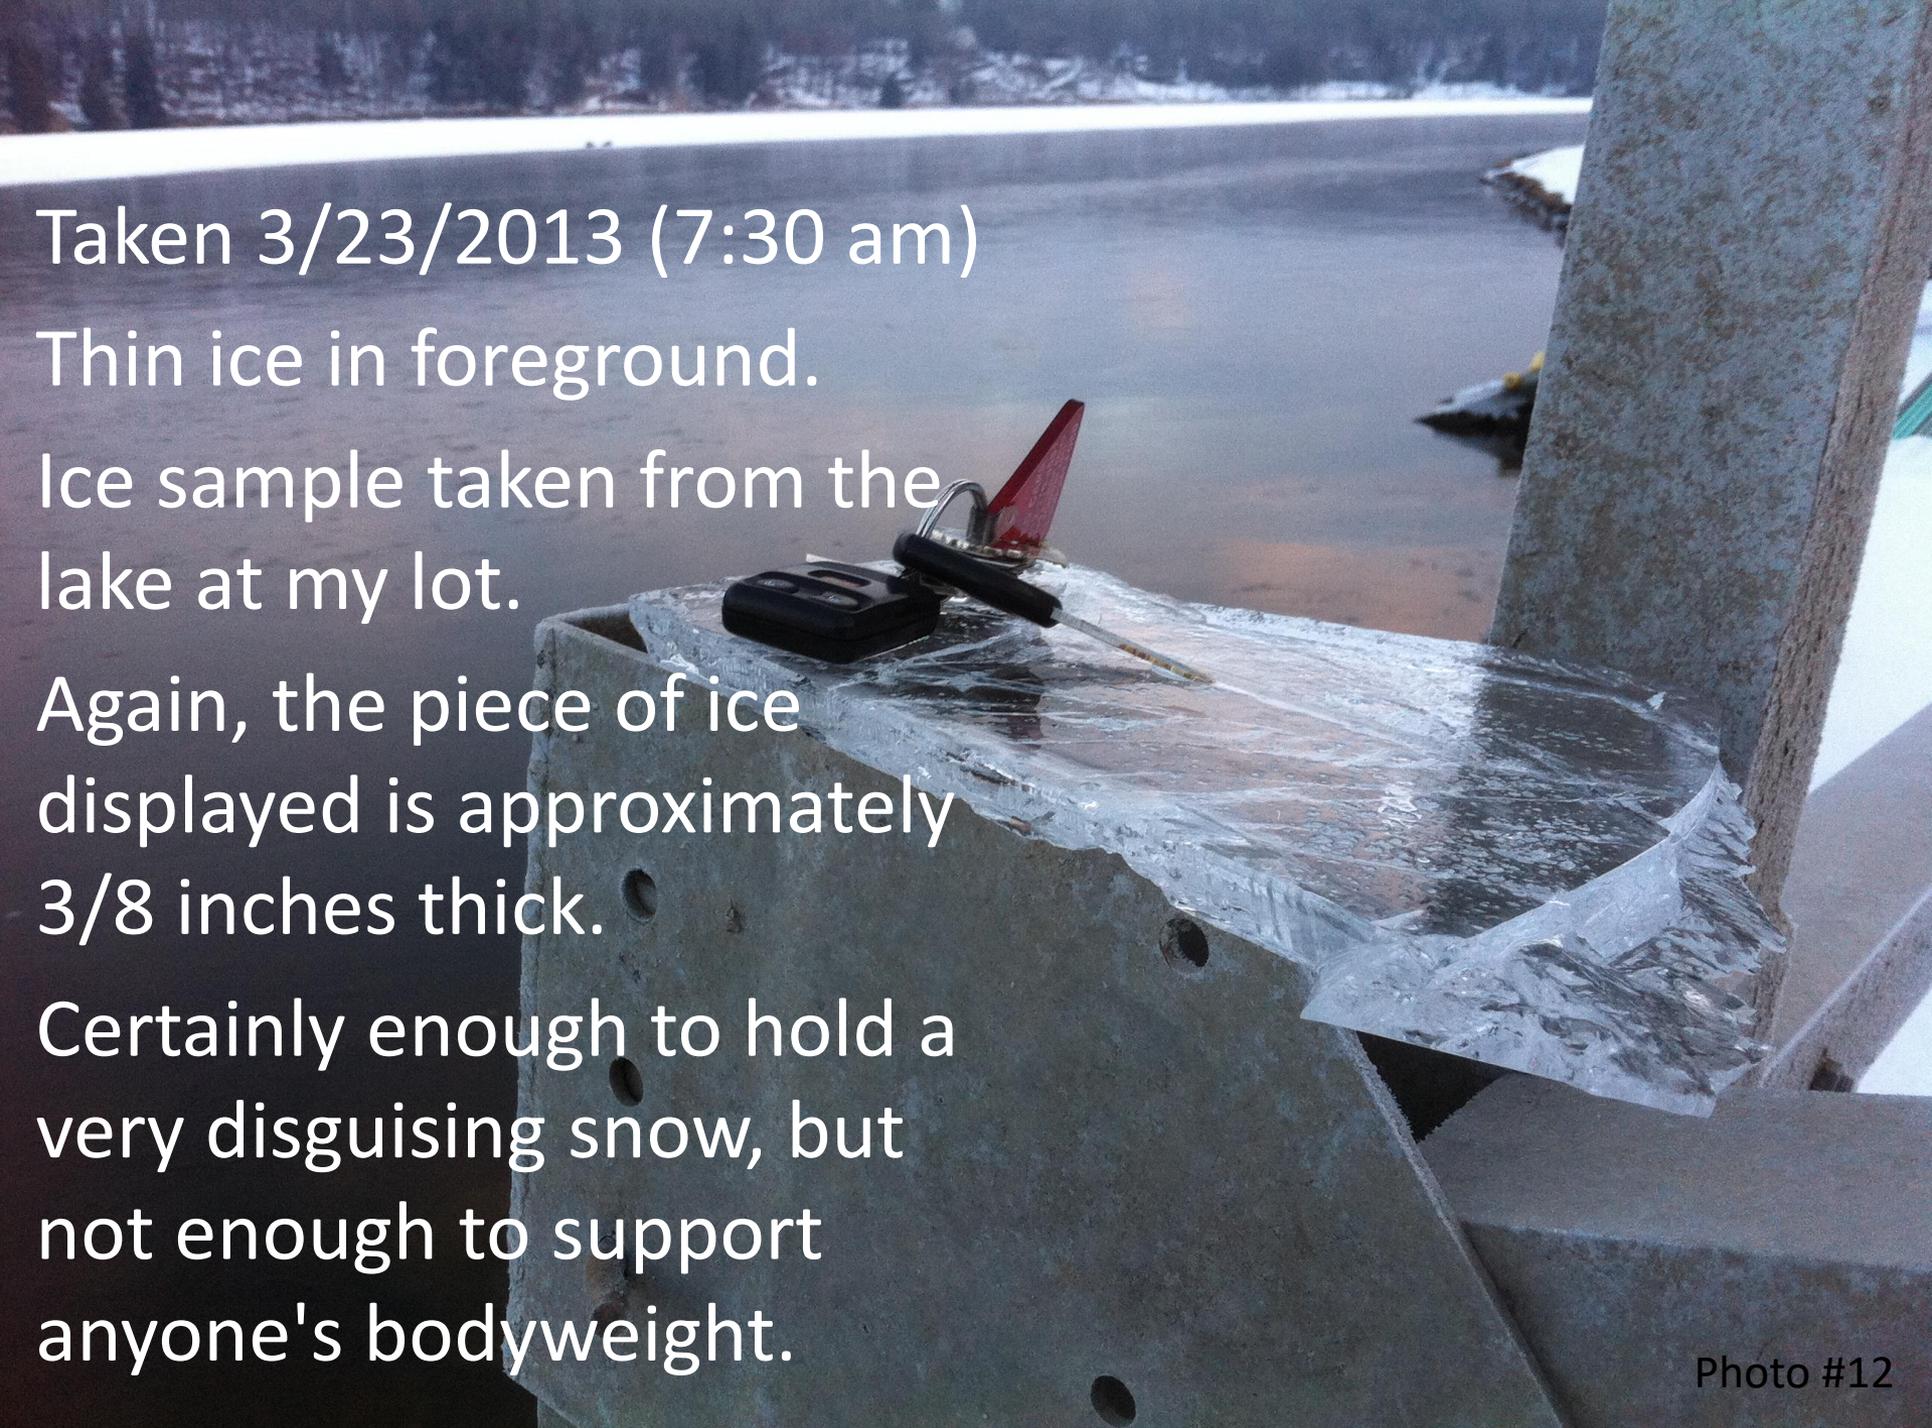

Taken 3/24/2013 (7:30 am)

Although this is not the best photo the piece of ice displayed is approximately $\frac{3}{8}$ inches thick.

Certainly enough to hold a very disguising snow, but not enough to support anyone's bodyweight.

Taken at my in-laws lot, location of the

Photo #11

A photograph showing a thin, rectangular piece of ice resting on a weathered metal post. The ice is approximately 3/8 inch thick and is covered with a thin layer of snow. A set of keys with a red flag attached to the ring is placed on top of the ice to provide a sense of scale. The background shows a body of water with a snow-covered shoreline in the distance.

Thin ice in foreground.

Ice sample taken from the lake at my lot.

Again, the piece of ice displayed is approximately 3/8 inches thick.

Certainly enough to hold a very disguising snow, but not enough to support anyone's bodyweight.

View from my lot toward the docks below the lodge.

Evidence that the prevailing winds are pushing unfrozen water (demonstrated in photo #8) toward our property.

This was a relatively calm day. When the winds are strong, this happens quicker.

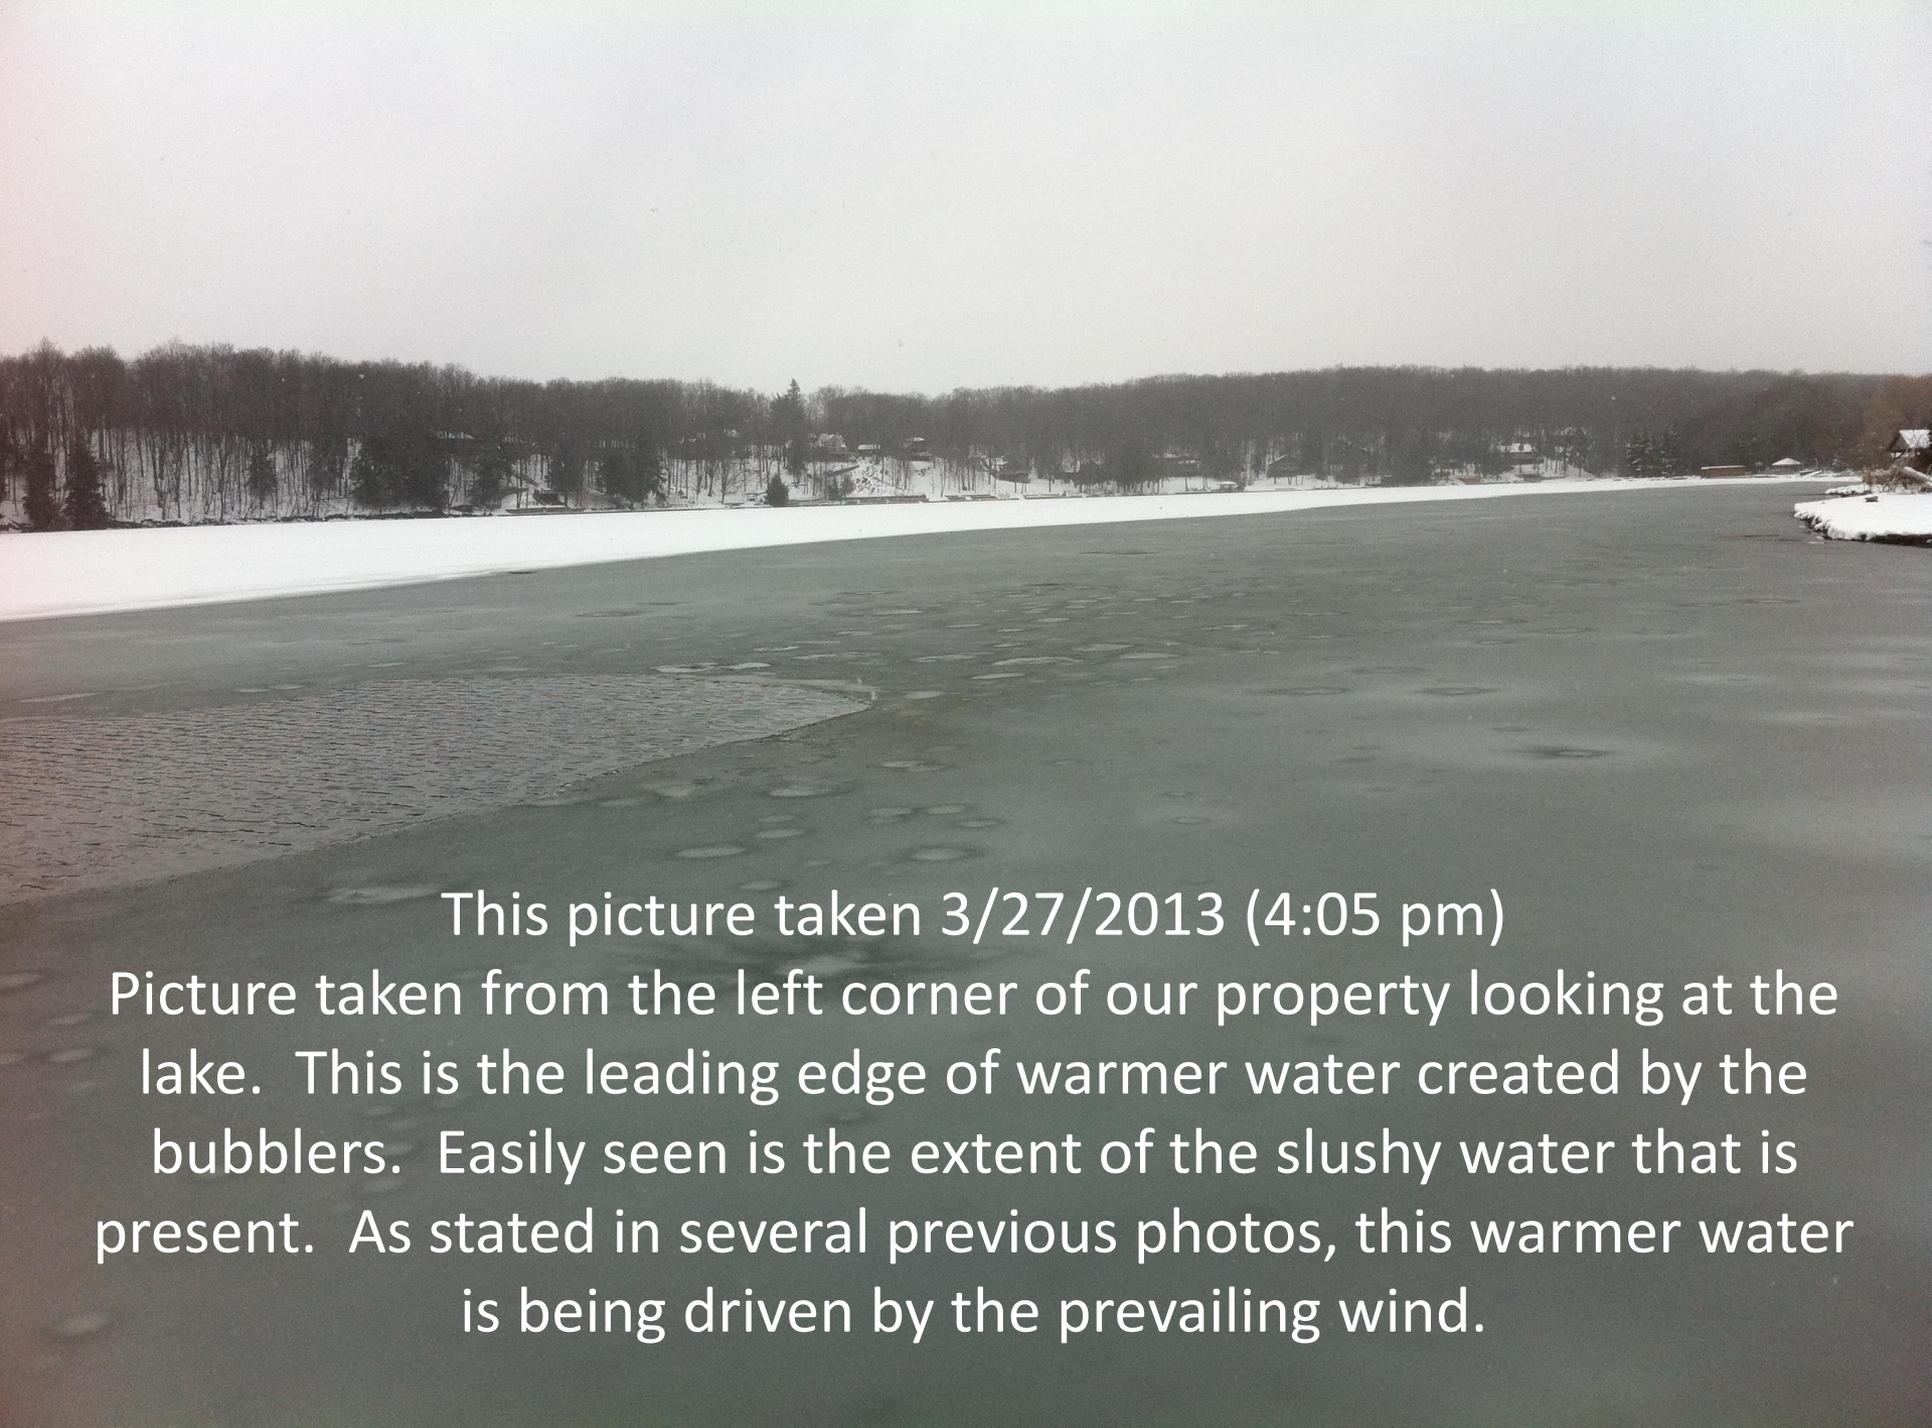

Taken 3/27/2013 (4:04 pm)

This picture was taken from the right corner of our property, facing the lake. Again, the ice is solid in the background. Warmer water created by the bubblers is pushed by the prevailing wind to our property and will continue toward Clear Run. The semi frozen material is nothing more than slush as shown in the following picture.

Slush

This picture taken 3/27/2013 (4:05 pm)

Picture taken from the left corner of our property looking at the lake. This is the leading edge of warmer water created by the bubblers. Easily seen is the extent of the slushy water that is present. As stated in several previous photos, this warmer water is being driven by the prevailing wind.

This has been happening every year since I first approached the boro In 2013.

I had a return letter from Patti Dewar from the 1st presentation that it was being addressed. Nothing has been done.

We have long been told that we have freedoms on our property as long as we do not effect our neighbors. Well, the docks below the lodge have had bubblers for years effecting my use of my property and it is time to put an end to it!

How a resident uses the lake in front of their home is their business and they certainly assume any responsibility for using the lake in the winter. There are many people who enjoy activities on the lake and it is flat out wrong that some of those residents cannot access the lake from their property, because of the actions of their neighbors. I being one of them!

Thank you!
